Subject: Much harsher Microsoft punishment required.

I am extremely dissatisfied with the DOJ decisions on the Microsoft anti-trust case. Not only has clear evidence been shown that Microsoft has illegally manipulated the market, but even during the case, Microsoft has continued to push their domination plans forward by great leaps and bounds. I do my best to avoid their software as much as possible, but it is actually quite impossible. What that is the case- you know that there are serious anti-trust issues.

Case in point: Microsoft's new "Passport" which forces everyone, even users of free software and unrelated services, to enter their personal information into this privately held database of Microsoft. What will it be used for? I have no control over it. Yet Microsoft forces us to join and gives us no other option.

They are starting to take over the gateways... and the toll of my privacy is too expensive. Would you rather let Microsoft have more power than the government? Because, if it is a government of the people, they have already won. Unless the DOJ acts strongly and swiftly to break Microsoft apart into completely separate, and competing groups, you are acknowledging that they are the matrix, and we have no one who can stop them.
